Safe Shooting Concerns

The Brown Township Board of Trustees continues to receive complaints from residents about gun noise and concerns about unsafe shooting practices in the township.

The Franklin County Sheriff's Office advises residents to call for service whenever they feel unsafe or are concerned about such behavior. A deputy will respond and investigate. The Sheriff's Office non-emergency number is 614-525-3310. In the event of an emergency, call 911.

Townships have no authority to regulate the discharging of a firearm. That authority rests with the Ohio General Assembly. For specifics, go to browntwp.org/seminar.

Because of strong interest from townships across the state, the Ohio Township Association has repeatedly introduced legislation that would allow townships some authority over the discharge of firearms, but the bills have never reached the floor of the House or Senate due to opposition from special interests.

Residents who wish to urge the Ohio General Assembly to permit townships some authority should contact State Representative Allison Russo and/or State Senator Stephanie Kunze, both of whom represent Brown Township residents. Contact information is available at www.ohiohouse.gov and www.ohiosenate.gov.

Home Value Reminder

All residential property owners in Franklin County should have received by mail from the Franklin County Auditor's Office a flyer listing their 2020 tentative home value. Ohio law requires that property values be updated every three years so they accurately reflect the current real estate market.

If you are satisfied that the tentative value is accurate: There is nothing you need to do. This value will be used to calculate your property taxes in the future.

If you believe the tentative value is incorrect or you have questions: Go to Your2020HomeValue.org to review the property information and its proposed value. Schedule an informal value review to discuss your property's value with appraisers. If you would prefer an in-person review at one of the satellite locations, you can also schedule that at the website above.

Final value letters will be mailed to those who participated in the informal process. If you still disagree with the final value, you may file a complaint with the Franklin County Board of Revision by March 31, 2021.

Franklin County Auditor Michael Stinziano may be contacted at 614-525-HOME or auditorstinziano@franklincountyohio.gov.

Stream Stewardship

We do not generally think of creeks as having skin. However, the vegetation along a stream serves as its skin. This buffer protects the stream from pollution much as our skin protects our bodies from bacteria and other things that could do us harm. When we mow to the edges of streams, build close to streams, or—worst of all—pave to the top of the stream banks, we take away crucial protection from creeks—the vegetative buffers, their skin.

These buffers ought to contain a variety of vegetation—trees, shrubs, and non-woody native perennial plants. Each kind of vegetation plays a distinct role. Among other things, they have different kinds of roots. Trees have large woody roots, while non-woody native perennials have finer, stringy roots that can extend 14 feet into the ground, in contrast to the shallow roots of turf grass. These roots help keep pollution out of our waterways and can remove pollution from the water flowing in our streams. In addition, vegetated buffers stabilize banks, keep the creek cool, reduce algae growth, and provide food and shelter for aquatic organisms. They are more effective when they are free from invasive plants that can take over stream corridors, excluding other plants and providing limited benefits to the stream. Please keep in mind that native plants can be installed along waterways as designated landscapes. One can control what plants grow along a stream and still provide the benefits of a vegetated buffer. Stream channels themselves also play a role in maintaining and improving water quality. Bacteria and other organisms living in the sand and gravel through which the water flows help clean water. The aeration in riffles both cleans and puts oxygen in the water. Natural processes that take place in pools remove nutrients. Vegetation growing in streams also helps improve water quality by taking up nutrients and filtering the water through their root systems.

Franklin Soil and Water has discovered that structures installed in streams that we call stream inserts can enhance aquatic life in our waterways as well. The inserts create gravel beds in which the water is treated. These beds also store water, maintaining stream flow in the creeks and increasing groundwater storage. Plants grow on the inserts that provide the benefits of in-stream vegetation even as microorganisms colonize material used to create the inserts, providing additional water quality treatment. The structures have been installed to reduce erosion, a major source of pollution. They can also be used to create and/or maintain pools and riffles. Streams need vegetated banks and healthy channels to keep clean. Protecting the buffers around streams provides tremendous benefits, benefits that are magnified when those buffers are planted with native plants. When channels have been degraded by straightening, high-flow volumes, and/or erosion, stream inserts can help restore the channel and improve the water quality of the stream. Small changes outside and inside the channels of our streams can make a big difference.

Norwich Fire Preparedness

Vince Papa retired on April 19, 2013, but his foresight and planning prepared Norwich Township Fire Department (NTFD) to respond to the COVID-19 pandemic outbreak. Fire Chief Jeff Warren credits Captain Papa, saying, "I was simply able to pull Captain Papa's plan off of the shelf, change the dates and the disease name, and immediately put this plan into action." The plan that Captain Papa developed required maintaining a stock of personal protective equipment (PPE) which the fire department was able to immediately begin distributing to staff. This stock of PPE ensured that our staff had sufficient PPE even as the supply chain crumbled for some time.

The Fire Department normally operates with a defined structure, which includes Administration, Code Enforcement/Fire Prevention, and Emergency Response. One of the greatest strengths of your fire department is the ability to be flexible. Immediately the staff in Code Enforcement/Prevention was reassigned to a support role for Emergency Response and Administration. This support includes purchasing PPE and disinfecting supplies to keep up with the much higher use during the outbreak. Very quickly NTFD began using an electronic reporting form to efficiently track the use and inventory of PPE.

COVID-19 has caused everyone in healthcare to dress differently for each patient encounter. Before COVID-19 most doctors, nurses, dentists, paramedics, and other first responders approached patients wearing disposable gloves for each patient encounter. Norwich Township paramedics, like all other medical professionals, now wear not only gloves but a surgical mask or respirator, gown or coveralls, and eye protection.

Firefighters pride themselves on clean stations and clean apparatus during normal times. They go to work at a clean station and clean it to pass it on clean to the next crew who cleans it and the cycle continues. Norwich Township firefighters have increased these efforts of cleaning and disinfecting from one time to multiple times a day.

Firefighters and paramedics are not immune to possible infectious exposures. Under the direction of Dr. Eric Cortez, M.D., Norwich Township Fire Department has a very specific guideline to follow if a provider has been exposed while at work or in their personal lives to reduce possibly exposing coworkers. These guidelines reflect the recommendations of the CDC and other applicable health directives. Dr. Cortez continually monitors these recommendations and directives and has made multiple adjustments to these guidelines over the past months.

Because of the planning, administration, and implementation of these plans, you can be confident your Norwich Township Fire Department is prepared to respond to possible contagious diseases, whether it is COVID-19, seasonal flu, or both at that same time.
